PURPOSE OF THE COURSE

Gender equality – which becomes reality when all genders are treated fairly and allowed equal opportunities – is a complicated human rights issue for every country in the world. Recent statistics are sobering. According to the World Economic Forum, it will take 108 years to achieve gender parity. The biggest gaps are found in political empowerment and economics. Also, there are currently just six countries that give women and men equal legal work rights. Generally, women are only given $\frac{3}{4}$ of the rights given to men. To learn more about how gender equality is measured, how it affects both women and men, and what can be done, this five days' workshop is organized.
